The Talmud is comprised of legal and non-legal text dispersed across 37 volumes. While each volume is dedicated to a specific category of law, its structure relies on cross-references and precedent implied from cases in other volumes. Our search engine takes a passage of Talmud as input and retrieves other cases deemed logically or conceptually important to the query. This is done by extracting references from traditional Talmudic commentaries to discover which cases they include when discussing the queried text.